

2019 CIO LEADERSHIP ACADEMY

Registration is Open!
Opening Retreat: Feb. 5 to 6

The role of the CIO in universities, colleges, museums, healthcare facilities, primary and secondary schools, and other research institutions is changing rapidly. A decade ago, the CIO was primarily concerned with supporting the IT infrastructure of his or her organization. Today, CIOs are increasingly part of an organization's leadership team, engaged in discussions about strategy and tactics. This evolution comes at the same time that both employees and clients are demanding sleeker, more mobile and more powerful technological infrastructures and interfaces. The modern CIO must be able to understand the changing face of technology, predict the needs of employees and clients, identify how new technologies solve old problems and be able to lead cross-functional teams. To be successful, today's CIO needs to be a visionary, a communicator, an implementer and a collaborator. Throughout the program, you will be mentored by senior CIOs encouraging and guiding you to the next chapter of your leadership journey.
